Cures Woman's Weaknesses.

We refer to that boon to weak, nervous, suffering women known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Dr. John Fyfe, one of the Editorial Staff of THE ECLECTIC MEDICAL REVIEW says of Unicorn root (Helonias Dioica) which is one of the chief ingredients of the "Favorite Prescription":

"A remedy which invariably acts as a tonic for the entire reproductive system. He continues: 'In Helonias we have a medicinal which more fully answers the above purposes than any other drug with which I am acquainted. In the treatment of diseases peculiar to women it is seldom that a case is seen which does not present some indication for this remedial agent.' Dr. Fyfe further says: 'The following are among the leading indications for Helonias (Unicorn root): Pain or aching in the back with rheumatic or atonic (weak) conditions of the reproductive organs of women; mental depression and irritability, associated with chronic diseases of the reproductive organs of women; constant sensation of heat in the region of the kidneys; urinary troubles; and convulsive disorders; abnormal condition of the digestive system; amenorrhea (absence of menstruation) or irregular menstruation; and accompanying an abnormal condition of the digestive organs and chronic (thin blood) habit; drawing sensations in the extreme lower part of the abdomen.'

"If more or less of the above symptoms are present, no invalid woman can afford to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, one of the leading ingredients of which is Unicorn root, or Helonias, and the medicinal properties of which it most faithfully represents."

Of Golden Seal root, another prominent ingredient of "Favorite Prescription," Prof. Finley Ellingwood, M. D., of Bennett Medical College, Chicago, says: "It is an important remedy in the treatment of the womb, in all catarrhal conditions, and general debility, it is useful."

Prof. John M. Scudder, M. D., late of Cincinnati, says of Golden Seal root: "In relation to its general effects on the system, there is no medicine in use about which there is such general unanimity of opinion. It is universally regarded as the tonic useful in all debilitated states."

Prof. E. Bartholow, M. D., of Jefferson Medical College, says of Golden Seal: "It is valuable in uterine hemorrhage, menorrhagia (flooding) and congestive dysmenorrhea (painful menstruation)."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription faithfully represents all the above named ingredients and cures the diseases for which they are recommended.

MADAME STEINHEIL'S TRIAL.

All Paris, always eager to reveal in sensations, is alert for the trial of Madame Marguerite Steinhell, charged with the murder of her husband and her mother. It is to begin in the Assize Court this week.

Madame Steinhell was Marguerite Japsy, daughter of eminently respectable parents and granddaughter of one of the prominent manufacturers of France, whose establishments in Bayonne still bear his name.

As a girl Marguerite Japsy lived in the little town of Beaumont. She was not very strong and was sent to the south for her health when still a child. That vision of her future perturbed her is evident from the confession that when she met Adolphe Steinhell while he was painting frescoes in a Bayonne church and fell in love with her she married him because she wished to go to Paris and mingle in the gay world there.

Steinhell was the son of a painter and nephew of the illustrious Meissonnier, so he had the entrée to the inner circles of one of the most delightful groups of Paris society. Immediately Madame Steinhell began her woman's campaign for power.

Madame Steinhell started her own salon. Every body came when Madame Steinhell invited. Money was spent lavishly, though her husband was poor. He mortgaged his home in the Impasse Roisin. He was hard pressed. Then came brighter if not better days. Madame Steinhell struck at the most glittering target. She was introduced to Felix Faure, president of France, by M. Lemerrier, a judge.

The president was subjugated by her indefinable charm, and his visits to the Steinhell home were frequent.

Then, two years later, Felix Faure died suddenly in the Elysee, his official home. The president had been visited in the afternoon by Cardinal Richier, archbishop of Paris, and by the prince of Monaco. They observed that he was greatly agitated and almost abrupt in his manner. In the next room was Madame Steinhell screaming for help. M. Le Gall, the president's secretary, hurried into the apartment.

He found the president of France dead. On a table was a small bottle containing a drug, a powerful stimulant, but not poisonous in small doses. The bottle was removed and Madame Steinhell was smuggled out of the palace. Time was not given her even to readjust her toilet. That night she attended a dinner and was the gayest person there. Then came the murder in the Impasse Roisin. Steinhell was found strangled in his bed and in the next room lay the mother of his wife, Mme. Japsy, similarly killed. In a third room Mme. Steinhell was found bound and gagged. The only other person in the building was Remy Couillard, a valet, who discovered the double murder and released Mme. Steinhell from her bonds.

She declared at once that she had been bound and gagged by three masked men and a woman who, she thought, might have been her husband's models, whom he took from the highways and byways of Paris. She said she had been robbed of all her jewelry. The police were able to make no headway in the case, and eventually Mme. Steinhell declared that she would herself track the murderers. After she had run down several inoffensive persons, who easily produced alibis, she accused Couillard, the valet, of the crime, and her charge seemed to be borne out to a degree when he was searched and in his pocketbook was found a pearl which had been taken from a ring described in the list given by Mme. Steinhell to the police. Couillard vigorously denied that he had any knowledge as to how the pearl came to be in his possession or that he was in any way implicated in the dual murder.

At this stage a jeweler came forward and declared that Mme. Steinhell had brought the ring to him, asked him to melt it down, and give the pearl back to her, which he had done. Thereupon she broke down and made a confession. "I put the pearl in Couillard's pocket," she said, "in order to shield another whose name I must not disclose. I love him and he has shunned me. I have foolishly wronged Remy Couillard." Then, after a pause, she burst out: "The man who committed the crime was Alexandre Wolff."

Wolff, who was the son of her cook, was arrested, but he easily established an alibi and was released. Then the woman herself was taken into custody.

CANNOT SELL CIDER.
Our people are much surprised to know that cider cannot be sold, neither can anyone squeeze the juice out of grapes and sell that, so we hear from high authority. This is said to be caused by provisions of the Byrd law. We have never read carefully that masterly bit of statutory wisdom. We feel safe in saying we never will. If these are some of its provisions the people ought to rise in their might and strike such an outrage from the statute books and boot its patron off the political stage. Such hypocritical rot is enough to damn any man or set of men, or any party which gloves in such slim. There is no demand for such laws except by fools. No reason for their existence in civilized communities anywhere, and they only bring contempt and opprobrium on the state that allows their existence.—[Stanton Spectator.]
